

Civil Asset Forfeiture in Michigan

Jarrett Skorup

Director of Marketing and Communications
Mackinac Center for Public Policy

Summary

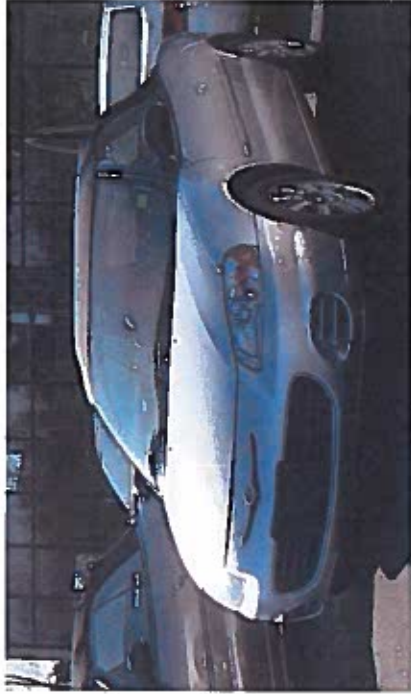

- Civil Asset Forfeiture is the process of a public entity, typically law enforcement, seizing and then taking ownership of assets.
- Seizure and forfeiture are different. Police seize assets by probable cause while investigating and then forfeit or take ownership of it later.
- After assets – almost always cash or cars – are seized, a person has 21 days to file a claim.
- People are processed in the criminal system, assets in the civil system. The standard of evidence is different.

Extreme Situations

Jacque Sutton, a 21-year-old college student from Mt. Clemens, attended a monthly “Funk Night” party at an art gallery in Detroit. It was alleged that the gallery did not possess a proper license to hold such an event. Police raided the facility, seizing and impounding 44 vehicles parked outside on the street. One of these cars was Sutton’s, and though he was never convicted of a crime (tickets for “loitering” by him and others were waived), he still had to pay nearly $1,000 to get his 1989 Ford Mustang GT back from law enforcement.

Extreme Situations

Krista Vaughn was giving her friend and Red Cross co-worker Amanda Odom a ride home from work. After dropping Odom off at a bank in Detroit, Vaughn circled the block before picking her back up. While she was waiting for Vaughn, an officer accused Odom of making eye contact with nearby motorists, supposedly for solicitation of prostitution. On this suspicion, police issued Odom a ticket and seized Vaughn's 2002 Chrysler Sebring. Odom's ticket was eventually dropped and neither woman was charged with any crime, but police still charged Vaughn $1,400 to get her vehicle back. Vaughn reluctantly paid the fee, because she believed it would be less expensive than trying to fight the case legally.

Extreme Situations

Federal agents seized $35,000 from the bank account of the Dehko family who own a grocery store in Fraser. The family made frequent cash deposits at their bank, because their insurance policy only covered up to $10,000. Federal law requires banks to report transactions above $10,000 and law enforcement suspected that the family was intentionally attempting to avoid their transactions from being reported, which is illegal. The Dehkos were never charged with a crime. The Internal Revenue Service finally returned the money in November 2013 after critical national media coverage.

EXPANDING OPPORTUNITIES

Extreme Situations

Judy Enright had her art seized by U.S. Fish and Wildlife officials while it was on display at an Ann Arbor art fair. She used feathers she found in her own backyard for this piece of art. However, according to the Federal Migratory Bird Act of 1918, it is illegal to sell certain types of bird feathers, a fact the federal officials used to justify their seizure of the art. Enright was never charged with a crime.

The Numbers

- About $15 million worth of assets are forfeited each year in Michigan from a total of 6,000+ cases.
- In about half the cases, law enforcement takes ownership prior to a conviction. In 2017, 736 people lost assets without being charged with a crime. 220 lost their property after being found not guilty.
- Most counties process no forfeitures; some process many. Concentrated in Southeast and Southwest Michigan.

How to Solve the Problem

- Ideally, a person should stay with their assets. Police investigate, prosecutors charge, court decides. All in criminal court.
- This legislation would require a conviction in criminal court prior to the civil system determining if the assets were gained from the illegal activity.
- 11 states have similar legislation, 3 states have eliminated civil forfeiture altogether.

MSP data - 2017 forfeiture cases with no criminal activity charged
